WHAT'S THE FOOD POLICY COUNCIL?

The Greater Cincinnati Regional Food Policy Council is a cross-sector collaboration of organizations and individuals, community influencers, and decision makers from across the food system.

We envision a socially, economically, and environmentally resilient regional food system throughout Greater Cincinnati and beyond.

OUR POLICY PILLARS:

Farms & Land Use

Local farms are the bedrock of our local food system.

Access & Education

The ability to consume nutritious food is a key social determinant of health.

Infrastructure

A strengthened regional food supply chain will increase resilience and economic growth for our communities.

Institutions

Organizations create and expand markets for local food by expanding their local food purchases.

While the superior flavor of local food is reason enough to purchase directly from your local farmers, there are a myriad of other reasons to support your own local market. Farmers Markets are critical connection points between local communities and local growers. They offer benefits spanning social, economic, and environmental spheres. To celebrate our regional food system, the Food Policy Council is kicking off a Summer Farmers Market Tour on National Farmer's Market Week. This guide has a schedule of our stops and more details about each of the markets. I hope you find your new favorite flavors at the market this summer – and when you see us, say hi!

HYDE PARK

Sundays from 9:30 am-1:00 pm
2100 Erie Ave | Cincinnati, OH | 45208
on Hyde Park Square

Each week HPFM builds community by bringing friends and families together for Sundays on The Square. The market strives to support growers and food artisans who use USDA Certified Organic, sustainable and regenerative growing practices (or who source ingredients from farmers who do); who provide highest-quality produce, meats and products; and who are located within 100 miles of Cincinnati.
